 although historic tb(w).t had been replaced by phonetic t(i)w.t by the New Kingdom (see Wilson, Ptol. Lex. [1997] p. 1161 & refs. there), the form with a b reappeared in Roman period Demotic texts, & indirect phonetic evidence may be used to argue that writings of "(soles of) feet, (pair of) sandals" using the Demotic sign for sandal (for ident. of this sign, see Möller, Paläogr., 3 [1912] 41, #433; Verhoeven, Späthieratischen [2001] pp. 182-83, #S33) may have been read tbty or var., although this correspondence can easily reflect an historic & well-known rather than contemporary phonetic correspondence, it could also suggest a reading including a b for the word "sandals" written with the sandal-sign; for that reason, writings of "sandals, feet" written with the sandal-sign are included here rather than in tw "(pair of) sandals; soles (of feet)," above

Days of the Month

N.B.: The following writings of numerals in dates are restricted to writings whose forms differ in some significant way from those presented in EG 707-12 & of which the reading is at least reasonably certain. Entries with the notation "in sequential list" are part of a sequence of at least one other consecutive date.

N.B.: Many scribes wrote only one sign which can be interpreted as the end of the writing of the name of the month or as the separate word sw "day"; unless there was a compelling reason to read the word sw "day" separately, this sign was identified as the end of the writing of the name of the month and was included in the copies in "Months." In such cases, the writing is included in "Days of the Month" under the heading (sw) (+) number. Readers should check originals in any case where they think that there is a passage where we have misdivided the date formula. For examples of writings which have been interpreted as writings of a group "season name + sw 'day'," see variants in EG and the entries for the names of the seasons (ḥ.t, pr.t, šmw).

Months

N.B.: Many scribes wrote only one sign which can be interpreted as the end of the writing of the name of the month or as the separate word sw "day"; unless there was a compelling reason to read the word sw "day" separately, this sign was identified as the end of the writing of the name of the month and was included in the copies in this file. In such cases, the writing is included in "Days of the Month" under the heading (sw) (+) number. Readers should check originals in any case where they think that there is a passage where we have misdivided the date formula. For examples of writings which have been interpreted as writings of a group "season name + sw 'day'," see variants in EG and the entries for the names of the seasons (ḥ.t, pr.t, šmw).

Problem File

The "Problem File" cites entries in which the Dictionary staff have not been able to resolve, to their satisfaction, the reading or translation of a word or in which they are uncertain whether the hand copy provided is correct. If the uncertainty involves the transliteration or translation of the main entry word, this is marked with question marks. Also included are words for which the Dictionary staff can only indicate "meaning uncertain." Other problems are marked in the margin by a →. It is hoped that scholars around the world will look at this list regularly and provide feedback to the Dictionary staff, so that these questions may be resolved and the final version of the Dictionary made as accurate as possible. Please note that users of all the Dictionary pages posted to the Web are encouraged to send all suggestions and corrections (whether corrections to readings or translations or simply typos) to the Dictionary staff for possible inclusion in the final version of the dictionary.

Problem File 2

The "Problem Files" cite entries in which the Dictionary staff have not been able to resolve, to their satisfaction, the reading or translation of a word or in which they are uncertain whether the hand copy provided is correct. If the uncertainty involves the transliteration or translation of the main entry word, this is marked with question marks. Also included are words for which the Dictionary staff can only indicate "meaning uncertain." Other problems are marked in the margin by a →. It is hoped that scholars around the world will look at this list regularly and provide feedback to the Dictionary staff, so that these questions may be resolved and the final version of the Dictionary made as accurate as possible. Please note that users of all the Dictionary pages posted to the Web are encouraged to send all suggestions and corrections (whether corrections to readings or translations or simply typos) to the Dictionary staff for possible inclusion in the revised electronic version and the hard copy version of the dictionary.
